► Expert who won't blind you with science

A LECTURER working on miracle material graphene has been hailed as the region's top science communicator.

Aravind Vijayaraghavan won a contest organised by the Museum of Science and Industry in Manchester to explain a complex subject to the public.

He won over his audience by describing the countless possibilities of the world's thinnest substance, which was discovered at Manchester University nine years ago.

The computer scientist will be one of the key speakers at the Manchester Science Festival in October.
